

Rina Anati

from her Facebook account (translated):

<https://www.facebook.com/rina.anati/posts/pfbid0NGg7YJVotVxy7kYH7gNPMRd6Ud7aU5QumHV3sKpvUX1boSMzwPZD753vfT9p5YWkl>

There Trump stands, he who gave the Iranians an ultimatum as if he had some tactical or strategic moves in his pocket that could lead the Iranians to say to themselves: Okay, there's no choice, let's accept the ultimatum so that he doesn't carry out his threat, and talks about successful negotiations: about achievements such as opening the Strait of Hormuz under joint control, about giving up enriched uranium and transferring it outside of Iran, and about dismantling ballistic missiles, and serious people analyze his words in depth as if they were real and not as if they were the wishful thinking of someone who was brought to his knees by the Iranians and is determined to escape the Persian Gulf - but like any crook, he wants to escape while declaring victory.

Any sensible person understands that the achievements Trump talked about are devoid of any foundation. After all, what reason do the Iranians have to grant Trump these achievements when all they need to do (and have done) is continue to close the Straits? There is no logic in them agreeing to a complete surrender that would disarm them, something they could have done even before the attack. Moreover, Trump's words are nothing more than a direct continuation of the boastful and arrogant statements that preceded the attack, in which he and Netanyahu promised the overthrow of the Iranian regime, its disarmament and its disarmament from ballistic missiles, no less - which, just like the achievements that Trump listed yesterday, were nothing more than empty promises.

Netanyahu harnessed Trump to war out of a purely political motive, designed to achieve only domestic goals (forgetting the massacre, covering up Qatargate, completing the coup, taking over the elections) that have nothing to do with Iran, and it is doubtful that if Trump had understood the true meaning of the war and its impact on the global market, he would have gone into it voluntarily, a war that used a super legitimate pretext – the elimination of an existential security threat – for the purpose of a deceptive war for the simple reason that these are unattainable goals, they were not achievable in June 2025 and have not become achievable now.

A war that relies solely on military force, one whose power is limited from the start and which quickly exhausts its power – after all, a war that relies solely on military force is doomed to failure (there are many examples of this in history), a war without an entry strategy and without an exit strategy, a war of bullies, of class kings who bring the guys to hell with beatings, but not only do they not take into account the enemy's power, but they also do not take into account their own weak points, their own Achilles' heel – which is what everyone who goes to war is supposed to do, examine all scenarios, even the unthinkable ones – after all, when the enemy is backed into a corner, he is likely to use them.

The War of the Rogues found Trump with domestic opposition and a shake-up in the markets that he did not expect and had no answer to. On the other hand, Netanyahu was seemingly devoid of weaknesses, since he does not count anyone in Israel – not the law, not the public, not the political system. He has no problem causing loss of life, damage to property and life. For some time now, he has been acting as an uninhibited dictator, who even the torture of his citizens did not move him from his political ambitions – to become a sole ruler while canceling his criminal trial (both goals were achieved de facto), but Trump's weak point also became Netanyahu's weak point.

Trump's surrender, in which he not only clearly didn't consult Netanyahu but did not even consider him in his map of interests, is pushing Netanyahu and Israel into a corner and leading to a defeat that Netanyahu never dreamed of - Israel is in the hands of Trump and, moreover, Israel is in the hands of Iran, it has nothing in its hands except for the continuation of attacks that have failed to achieve any declared goal - the Iranian regime is standing firm and is stronger than ever, more extremist than ever and yearning for revenge, the Iranian nuclear program (let's remember that Netanyahu led Trump to cancel the nuclear agreement) is in the hands of the Iranians and now they have even more incentive than before to get the bomb and, contrary to all the empty promises - Iran has not lost the ability to launch the ballistic missiles that destroy Israel with great efficiency.

This is not just a sham war aimed at Netanyahu's political goals, but a terrible defeat, a defeat that not only did not improve Israel's security situation or eliminate the Iranian threat, but did the opposite - set Israel's situation back years (oh the irony), to the situation before the signing of the nuclear agreement.

And all of this could have been known even before the attack, not only through strategic assessments but based on acquaintance with the two crooks Trump and Netanyahu, and if Trump can be given the defense of the ridiculous fool who got into the war against his will without understanding its consequences, Netanyahu can be said to have led the sham war with eyes wide open and with the clear knowledge that it was a sham war that would endanger Israel - from his point of view, political gain is more important than Israel's security - as we saw clearly in the war with Hamas, which was neither collapsed nor eliminated but remained intact, stronger than ever. Netanyahu could not have led the war of the fools without the support of the Israeli public – apparently the dumbest public in the world, even more so than the redneck Republicans.